TORPEDO BOATS REPELLED.

Battleship Fleet Successfully Fights Off Imaginary Enemy.

On Board U. S. S. Battleship Kansas, at Sea on Southern Drill Grounds, by wireless via Portsmouth, Va., Sept. 20.

—After a night of successful battle practice in repelling the imaginary attacks from a flotilla of torpedo boats of a supposed enemy, the 16 battleships of the American Atlantic fleet today are swinging lazily at anchor, giving the officers and men a rest in order to be in trim for the strenuous work of day battle practice which will begin promptly Wednesday morning.

While both officers and men were displeased at the long delay caused by the heavy weather which made impossible the towing of the target rafts by the small auxiliary craft, they were in a better frame of mind today because of the possibility of more favorable weather for the day battle practice tomorrow. It is the intention of the commander-in-chief, Rear Admiral Schroeder, to rush this work and he hopes that all the vessels will have
